

Descendants of John Budd

1. JOHN³ BUDD (JOHN² BUDDE, JOHN¹)^{1,2} was born October 1599 in Stepney, London, England³, and died October 03, 1669 in Rye, Westchester Co., Connecticut now New York⁴. He married CATHERYN BUTCHER^{5,6} November 21, 1620 in Chichester St. Andrews, Sussex, England⁷, daughter of RICHARD BUTCHER and CATHERYNE HARGRAVE. She was born September 1598 in Sussex, England⁷, and died May 13, 1674 in Rye, Westchester Co., Connecticut now New York⁸.

Notes for JOHN BUDD:

John Budd was a wealthy shipping merchant from England

A copy of the book "The Budd Family" published by press of F.W.Sonneborn, No. 10 Warren St., New York, NY in 1881 is in the Congressional library, Washington, D.C. This book of 68 pages given an address of Co. Enos Goble Budd delivered at Budd Lake, Morris Co., NJ August 14, 1878 at the first reunion. It also contains a letter written Nov 12, 1879 to E.G.Budd, Budd? Lake, Morris Co., NJ by Thomas S. Budd (b. Feb. 14, 1800) of Charleston, South Carolina. An excerpt of the latter:

It appears that the King of England donated to John and Thomas Budd a portion of the State of New Jersey called The Budd Valley. The two brothers came to America leaving their eldest brother, William, in or near London. John Budd settled in New Jersey and Thomas Budd came to South Carolina. etc.

Note by E.G.Budd: The Budd Valley is now the German Valley of Morris Co., NJ and the aged writers ancestors were related to the Burlington County Budds. The lands spoken of had been leased by a Budd for 99 years I think.
 Notes from "History of Rye, NY" by C.W.Baird. In these transactions John Budd takes the lead instead of Peter Desbrow. His first treaty with the Indians is dated Nov. 8, 1661, when he bought the tract of land called by the Indians, Apawamis, and by the white men, Budd's Neck (now Rye Neck) bounded on the east by Blind Brook, and on the west by the little stream whose Indian name was Pockcotesswake, since known as Stony Brook or Beaver Meadow Brook. Northward it extended as far as the Westchester Path, and southward to the sea. The land thus described constitutes now the southwestern part of the town. It has always formed a part of the territory of Rye. But, unlike the former purchases, it was claimed by a single proprietor and for a period of sixty years was held under a distinct patent. John Budd's treaty with the Indians is given on pages 13 and 14 of this book, a part of which reads ".Have fully and absolutely bargained and doe forever sell unto John Budd, senior of South hole, his heirs etc . for the juste sum of eightie pounds sterling,."

>From The Budd Family-page 5: He (John Budd) married a Kathlene Brown, and left two sons, John Budd and Joseph Budd. His will dated 13th of October 1669, bequeaths to his son John, all his portion of the mills on Blind Brook, and to Joseph all of Budd's Neck. John Budd, the 2nd and issue, appears to have moved to other localities.

In May 1637, a ship called the "Hector" sailed out of London, bound for Boston in England's newly established American colonies. Aboard this ship was a wealthy British shipping merchant John Budd, his wife Katherine Browne, a woman of royal ancestry, and their children.

Town Founding No. 1: NEW HAVEN COLONY

In August 1637, an exploring party of English settlers sailed out of Boston Harbor, went down the coast several miles, and landed at a place that the Native American Indians called "Quinnipiac" (or "Long Water Place"). The explorers liked what they saw and left seven of their men to prepare the area for occupation by Puritan colonizers.

On March 30, 1638, a large company of settlers sailed out of Boston for the new site. Among them were the Budd family. On April 16, 1638, they landed at the new site to found New Haven Colony. Other ships followed, bringing more settlers. The settlers quickly began building their new colony. In late 1638, they purchased the land from the Indians. John Budd was assigned lot no. 56.

On October 25, 1639, the settlers elected their community government. John Budd was among the men signing a Fundamental Agreement formally establishing New Haven Colony.

Most of the first settlers at New Haven were Puritans -- a strict religious group that later formed the basis for the Congregational Church and the Church of Christ in the United States. John Budd, however, was a member of the Church of England, which became the Episcopal Church in America. Because he was not Puritan, Budd lived in some tension with his neighbors. At one point he was fined by the New Haven magistrates for hiding and protecting Quakers, a Christian group that the Puritans opposed and were trying to keep out of New Haven.

Town Founding No. 2: SOUTHOLD, LONG ISLAND

In September 1640, John Budd left New Haven with his and some other New Haven families on a ship bound for the northeastern edge of Long Island to establish a settlement there, which they named Southold. Once again, he was an Anglican adherent amid Puritans set on establishing a new community structured around their specific religious and moral beliefs. Most of the other Southold founders had originally sailed under the leadership of the Puritan cleric Christopher Youngs first from England to Salem, Massachusetts, in 1637 and from Salem to New Haven. In New Haven, Puritan leaders intent on establishing new religious communities in New England persuaded Rev. Youngs to sail across Long Island Sound with his followers to settle land on the island's North Fork that they had acquired from the island's Corchaug Indians.

John Budd, who was beyond doubt the wealthiest man in the new settlement, quickly established himself as one of the leaders of the new community. Because Southold was included in the United Colonies of New England, its residents were expected to select Deputies to attend the colonies' General Court in Hartford, Connecticut. Budd was the first deputy appointed to the court by the people of Southold. Budd was also the town's first authorized officer to train the local home guard, a responsibility which earned him the title of Lieutenant. Budd was apparently so highly respected and successful in this responsibility that, when he made a trip overseas in 1654, colonial records in New Haven recorded that "By reason of Budd's absence Southold is left destitute of a fitt man to exercise the military company there since Lt. Budd went to England."

In 1649, Budd built his family a four-room home east of town near a pond which became known as Budd's Pond. In 1658, he deeded the house to his daughter and son-in-law, Anna and Benjamin Horton, as a wedding gift. They moved the house 10 miles away to the village of Cutchogue. (The structure, now known as "The Old House," still stands there. It is the oldest European-style dwelling in New York State and is listed on the Register of National Historic Sites. James Van Alst, the architect in charge of its restoration, described it as "undoubtedly the finest example of English domestic origin to be found in this country.")

Despite his civic leadership, Budd's tenure in Southold apparently was one of controversy as well. He was a major landholder in Southold. As such, he was legally accountable to the local general court (composed solely of church members) who were required to review and approve or deny any settler's request to sell his home or land. Budd clearly possessed a strong independent spirit, and in 1657 he sold some of his land without asking "permission." As a result, he was sued by three other Southold settlers; the final disposition of this case is not clear.

Budd clearly grew restless during his tenure at Southold. As in New Haven, Southold's general court governed the town in accord with strict Puritan standards, and Budd was still an Episcopalian. He apparently explored the predominantly Episcopalian settlements in Virginia, but decided against settling there. Budd's true desire seems to have been to, in essence, establish his own colony, where he would be answerable to no one, and he was willing to use his wealth to create this personal domain. In 1661, he decided to leave Long Island and move to an area that was at the time on the very southwestern edge of the Connecticut Colony.

Town Founding No. 3: RYE, WESTCHESTER COUNTY, NEW YORK

Peter Disbrow, John Coe, and Thomas Stedwell negotiated and purchased from the native Mohegan Indians a tract of land southwest of Greenwich known as Peningo Neck. The land stretched on the west from a stream known as Blind Brook east to Long Island Sound. The sale apparently did not include an island in the Sound and just off the shore, so in June 1660, the three men purchased this land (Manussing Island) as well. In May 1661, they purchased additional land on the north edge of Peningo Neck.

Disbrow and the others in his party apparently were more interested in securing title to land than in settling it immediately. This created an opportunity for someone else to take the lead in establishing a new community, and as a successful and wealthy businessman, John Budd was quick to take advantage of the opportunity. On November 8, 1661, Budd concluded his separate negotiation with a Mohegan chief to buy a large (4,800-acre) piece of land immediately across Blind Brook from the Disbrow company's landholdings. This land became known as Budd's Neck. On November 12, 1661, Budd added to his landholdings by purchasing from the Indians some islands that were in the immediate vicinity. In June 1662, Budd then acted with Disbrow, Coe, and Stedwell jointly to purchase yet more land directly north of Budd's Neck. One of the first buildings constructed in this new community was Budd's Mill, at the mouth of Blind Brook. He operated the grist mill, which proved to be very successful with the new inhabitants of Peningo Neck.

Disbrow selected the name of Hastings for his new holdings. He apparently also considered Budd's lands to be part of the new Hastings town, whose settlement he intended to oversee. Budd obviously had other ideas. He was determined that his personal landholdings would be a separately governed colony, and by the fall of 1664, he had assigned to his lands the name of Rye, probably because of his family's close connections with the town of Rye back in his native England. Moreover, Disbrow had planned Hastings with the idea that each settler would be given equal property. Budd took a more business-like approach and (as in Southold) preferred to sell off portions of his land without first obtaining the permission of the town. Disbrow regarded this behavior as a threat to the future of "his" colony. For the next several years, Budd and Disbrow battled in court over whose approach was to predominate. In the course of that legal action, it was agreed that the name Rye would be assigned to the entire Peningo Neck settlement area. The more substantial issues, however, were still unresolved in 1669, when John Budd turned over his landholdings in both Southold and Rye to his son, John Budd, Jr., and retired from public life.

Despite his contentiousness with Disbrow and resulting legal conflicts, Budd quickly established himself as a political leader across the entire Hastings/Rye area (again, much as he had in Southold). Biographer Lily Wright Budd describes his responsibilities as follows:

... John Budd was elected the first representative when Hastings [formally] submitted to the jurisdiction of Connecticut on 26 January 1662 and he was elected as Hastings' first Deputy to the General Court in Hartford on 26 March 1663.... At the session of the General Court in Hartford on the 8th of October 1663, "Lnt John Bud" makes his appearance, and "is appoynted Commisioner for the Town of Hastings, and is invested with Magistraticall power within the limits of that Town." As magistrate Budd was "commissioned to grant warrants" and "to marry persons," and he had clear authority to arrest

"such as are ouertaken with drinke, swearing, Sabboath breaking, slighting of the ordinances, lying, vagrant persons, or any other that shall offend in any of these."

As noted above, John Budd retired from public life 1669. He died in Rye in 1670 and is presumed to have been buried in a private family plot a short distance north of Budd's Mill.

Biography of John Budd, from the Frost Family Genealogy, pp 343-4

Note: It is sometimes difficult to ascertain if certain records belong to John Budd, Sr. or John Budd, Jr. nmt

"JOHN BUDD was in New Haven, 1639, as a Freeman. The first we know of him on Long Island is in October, 1640. "Mr. Jones hath the lott granted unto him which was formerly granted unto John Budd of Yeancock (Southold)." In 1648 "it is ordered that John Budd have granted him 4 acres off new ground added to his other ground to make an 8 acre lot." In 1650 he is mentioned at Southampton as owner of a water mill and running the same, and is called Lt. His name occurs there no more after 1651. He moved to Westchester County, 1660, on account of some difficulty with his neighbors. The Budd house is still standing. In 1679 Lt. Budd sold it to John Hallock and it now belongs to Jonathan W. Huntting. John Budd figures in Indian deeds in Rye, May 10, 1673, and granted, 1681-2, a meadow in Rye to Jon. Horton.

[Note: I have seen in another reference that the "trouble with neighbors" may have been due to him following Quaker beliefs. nmt]

John Budd, b. in England, came from London about 1632, and was one of the planters of New Baven Colony, in 1639. He was appointed a deputy from Southold, L. I., in 1653 to the General Court, but had gone to England in the meantime. His appointment from Southold indicates that he was already settled there. He was lieutenant at Southold until 1660, when he resigned, he having removed or being about to remove to Rye, Westchester county, N. Y., where he was settled in 1661. He m. Katherine -; d. 1670. By a declaration, dated October 15, 1669, he gave to son John his part of the mill on Blind brooke, and all lands otherwise undisposed of, and personal property, in consideration whereof John was to pay his father or his mother "thirty pounds a year in good pay that is to say wheat Twenty pounds porck one Barrell pease the rest. . . . that we may be freed from trouble." This instrument seems to have been recorded May 13, 1675, which was probably about the time of John's death. Issue:

John "of Rye" Ogden Ogxxx was born Bradley Plain, Hampshire, England 3 Sep

1600.(22021) John died Bef 7 Aug 1682 Fairfield, Fairfield, Connecticut, USA, at approximately 81 years of age.(22022) He married twice. He married Anne Richardson Bradley Plain, Hampshire, England, 4 May 1627.(22023) Anne is the daughter of Joseph Richardson. He married Judith Budd in Stamford, Fairfield, Connecticut, USA, 19 Apr 1638.(22024) Judith was the daughter of Lt John Budd. (Wheeler, p9): "This John Ogden was one of the petitioners to King Charles II for the charter of Connecticut, and in 1674-5 was deputy Governor of the state. He was instrumental in settling the dispute about the boundary line between New York and Connecticut, and in many ways is shown to have been an important member of the Colony, and in the confidence of the people." and "His descendants are numerous, and their record worthy of being preserved."

(Wheeler, pp 12-14): "A perplexity must here be noted that is met in the early colonial records prior to 1665, concerning two contemporary John Ogdens. John Ogden, the Pilgrim, had a cousin John Ogden, son of his uncle Thomas Ogden (b. 1565), and who was nine years his senior. He had conveyed a messuage and tenement situated in Bramshaw, England, to his sister Mary, on Mar. 7, 1638, about which time he emigrated to the New Haven Colony, thus coming to America about two years before John Ogden, the Pilgrim. He probably became one of the first settlers of Stamford, Conn. He was closely associated in the New World with his father-in-law, John Budd, whose daughter Judith became his second wife, Apr. 19, 1638, and doubtless soon after his immigration. ... "This John Ogden is known to modern writers as 'John Ogden of Rye,' because he became associated with his father-in-law, John Budd, in mill property at the new settlement at Rye, and took up residence there. Rye is near the western end of Long Island Sound, on the mainland, and was settled in 1660; it was first under the jurisdiction of Connecticut, but in 1683 was transferred to New York, being now in Westchester Co. This John Ogden was a prominent man among the settlers, and a man of great strength of character. He is probably the John Ogden who joined with other New England men in sending a petition to the King, 1665-1667. At General Court held at Hartford, Oct. 8, 1674, John Ogden was named as a deputy Governor for the Colony of Rye. The following year, Apr. 20, 1675, John Winthrop was made Governor, and John Ogden assistant Governor of the Colony of Connecticut. In 1679 the town of Rye granted John Ogden 48 or 50 acres by the waterside at Fishing Rock, for the purpose of building a house and wharf. In May, 1682, John Ogden appeared before the court in Hartford, and was granted 20 acrs of land for a pasture. He also brought forward some matters of dispute about the boundary lines between New York and Connecticut, and was the bearer of a letter from the Genral Court at Hartford to the Governor of New York, relating to it." ... "When he [John Ogden, the Pilgrim] was contemplating removing to New Jersey he sold his 'housing and home lot, etc.' in Southampton to his cousin, John of Rye, who made it over to his son-in-law, John Woodruff, the following year."

Notes for BENJAMIN HORTON:

http://ntgen.tripod.com/bw/budd_index.html

Hortons in America, along with other sources, says Benjamin Horton, son of immigrant Barnabas Horton, married Ann Budd, implying she was a daughter of John-1 Budd. This daughter is not named in the will of John-1 Budd. Torrey doesn't list that marriage and shows this Benjamin Horton marrying widow Ann (___) Tucker.

The McLaurin Horton Genealogy, 1990, says there is an "undated" document that is an agreement between Ann, wife of Benjamin Horton, and John Budd on the distribution of their father's estate. McLaurin doesn't give a source for where this document is. I haven't found it in Southold records, perhaps it is in Rye records.

Torrey shows a Benjamin Horton of the third generation married the Ann-3 Budd, b 1677, presumably the daughter of John-2 Budd in the 1680's. This may be a confusion with reports of the earlier marriage... or a different union altogether. The Edward Hart Genealogy say Ann Budd, daughter of John Budd, Jr, b 1667, married Benjamin Horton, a grandson of Barnabas Horton.

Notes for JONATHAN BUDD:

[JohnBudd&decendants.FTW]

Jonathan Budd and wife probably died between 1912 and 1920. They show in 1910 Monroe twsp, Putnam County Census. In 1912 (while filing for Civil War pension) Jonathan was living in or near Continental, Ohio. Jonathan does not show up in Monroe Twp in 1920 U.S. Census. Either they moved or died in Monroe Twsp, Putnam county, Ohio.

Jonathan Budd fought in the Civil War as a Union Soldier for a period of one month. Info as follows:

Private, Company A, 198th Ohio Infantry. Enlisted 5 April 1865, discharged 8 May, 1865
Sent for Civil War records for Jonathan on April 7, 2001. Called June 30 inquire, they said probably mid August.

Pension file found, file number 1,054,594 Shows Jonathan's date of birth and residences up to 1912. No records in pension file after 1912. Suspect they turned him down cold because in order to get a pension you had to be over 62 years old and serve at least 90 days and he only served 30 days.

Talked to Ruth Wihelm on July 3 to inquire about death record of Jonathan Budd. She said she would look it up and call thursday. If they didn't have record, he probably died in hospital in Allen or Hancock Co.,-----she later responded. No probate record available. She said he probably died in another county.

On August 5, 2001 I sent off for death certificates for two John Budds, one who died in Defiance Co., OH and the other who died in Allen Co., OH. Request is with Ohio Historical Society.
